Osler's Franchise Review includes legislative updates, commentaries on recent cases and frequently asked questions as well as news on our team. In this edition, we look at new EU privacy standards that may apply to Canadian businesses, proposed new restrictions on advertising to children and what private equity investors should keep in mind when purchasing a franchise system. We also have updates on some recent key cases in Ontario, Québec and Western Canada. In our FAQs, we continue our series looking at common concerns for those considering offering franchises in Québec.

Government of Canada: Leave those kids alone Andraya Frith, Lucas Versteegh Franchisors in the food and restaurant industry should prepare for restrictions on their ability to advertise. The proposed Child Health Protection Act is a private Member's bill that aims to prohibit certain food and beverage marketing directed at children. Read more

OPC issues warning: Affiliate marketing industry must comply with privacy requirements John Salloum, Paul Kotschorek The Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada (OPC) published a warning for affiliate marketers after an international study found significant violations of privacy law and the rules regarding unsolicited communications. Given the OPC's warning, franchisors would be wise to review their affiliate marketing practices to ensure compliance with applicable laws. Read more

Private equity and franchising

Private equity's untapped opportunity in Canadian franchising Andraya Frith, Dominic Mochrie, Christine Jackson The franchise business model is used in virtually all industries and represents a growing and important sector of the Canadian economy with many potential deal opportunities. However, these huge potential upsides come with significant traps for the unwary. We set out some key issues that PE firms should consider when evaluating an investment opportunity in a franchise system. Read more

Québec

Breach of the franchise agreement: No automatic compensation for the franchisor Éric Préfontaine, François Laurin-Pratte The Québec Superior Court confirmed that a franchisor is not liable for a franchisee's failure to be profitable. On the other hand, when a franchisee is in breach of the franchise agreement and ceases to operate, a franchisor cannot claim lost profits without adequate evidence. Read more

The validity of non-refundable franchise fees Éric Préfontaine, François Laurin-Pratte, Josy-Ann Therrien A clause requiring a non-refundable franchise fee is entirely valid. The mere fact that franchisees spoke to a journalist about their bad experience with a franchisor does not constitute actionable defamation. Read more
