Emma recently completed her second year of the JD program at the University of Toronto. Prior to law school, Emma completed her International Bachelor of Business Administration at the Schulich School of Business, where she graduated with distinction and studied abroad in Vienna, Austria. Emma also completed her Certificate of International Management, finishing first in the program.

Throughout her undergraduate degree, Emma explored roles in financial services and program management. After completing her undergraduate degree, Emma gained experience in the QSR industry at a multi-national organization, where she held various positions spanning across new product development, supply chain operations, ordering channels and digital strategy.

During law school, Emma has served as executive on the Business Law Society and Women and the Law in addition to volunteering as a tutor, mentor and JD Student Ambassador for incoming students. She was also a member of the Future of Law Lab, where she conducted comparative research around AI client service delivery. This past year, Emma participated in the Wilson Moot and was an Articles Editor on the University of Toronto Faculty of Law Review.
